

ABSTRACT

A method of configuring a peripheral device on a network. The method includes the acts of sending a request from a host across the network, receiving a response from the peripheral device and determining by the host whether to configure the peripheral device, without user intervention. The response includes a current configuration setting of the peripheral device.

5